

Advancing health and wellbeing in Asia and beyond

“Global health is about breaking down borders to improve lives. Our global health institute has a unique opportunity to create a ripple effect of impact across the region and beyond.”

Professor London Lucien Ooi Peng Jin
Director, SingHealth Duke-NUS Global Health Institute

Who we are

The SingHealth Duke-NUS Global Health Institute (SDGHI) was established in Singapore in 2018 to advance the global health agenda and improve global health equity with a special focus on Asia.

With our understanding and proximity to the communities in Asia, SDGHI seeks to tackle prevalent health challenges, reinforce health systems, and better insulate countries from pandemics and disease threats using innovative solutions, programmes and partnerships - with an Asian context and a global perspective.

What we do

As part of the SingHealth Duke-NUS Academic Medical Centre (AMC), SDGHI harnesses the capacity of SingHealth, Singapore's largest cluster of healthcare institutions, and the Duke-NUS Medical School to advance global health research and capacity development across the region.

This unique set-up positions us ideally to spearhead advancements in healthcare and wellbeing, addressing critical needs in areas including:

- Cancer
- Ophthalmology
- Mental health
- Planetary health
- Maternal and child health
- Surgery
- Pandemic preparedness
- Healthcare governance and management

What we offer

To respond to global changing needs, SDGHI is vested in offering resources that empower our global community to educate, advocate for the importance of, and contribute to the advancement of global health. This includes educational opportunities, a growing platform for knowledge transfer, experiential perspectives in global health, and avenues of inspiration for researchers, policy-makers, medical professionals and the general public.

Our goals

-  Improve health outcomes
-  Increase health security
-  Strengthen health systems
